KLM stands for Klee, Léger, Miró.
A pseudonym paying homage to three giants of 20th-century painting.
As a child, KLM was a wide-eyed visitor to the Museum of Central Africa in Tervuren.
The masks and statuettes made a deep impression on him. This ‘strangeness’ would gradually become familiar to him and shape his imagination just as much as modern Western painting.
Whilst studying for a degree in philosophy, he attended art classes at the Watermael-Boitsfort Academy.
A late convert to Figuration Libre, he developed a varied and imaginative body of work.
His love of colour and form drove him to constantly seek out new harmonies and structures.
