This artist is from Namur... and proud of it.

He studied art at the Academy of Fine Arts in Namur, where he graduated with the highest honours. He has set up an 'open studio' in a pedestrian street in the heart of Namur. He likes passers-by to push open the door and come and talk to him about his paintings, give him their opinion, and relive the painting he has created in their own way. This is quite symptomatic of how he feels and of his fascination with death, as he likes to say that his works only belong to him for the time it takes to create them.

He works in acrylic and his paintings give the impression of having been conceived at the precise moment of a gesture or a pose, or even a frozen moment in time. His fallen heroines are bathed in harsh light and offer themselves to their audience.

Quinot has already organised both solo and group exhibitions.
